Robert Lam—Butterfly Head Chef

San Francisco Chronicle Top 6 Rising Star Chefs

When Robert Lam was studying at the Culinary Institute of America in New York City, he was not afraid to push the boundaries. In fact, he was kicked out of a class on Asian cooking for disagreeing with the simplistic approach of the teacher! Today, Lam calls his unique style of cooking “Asian within Asian” and draws from Vietnamese, Thai, Chinese, Japanese and Korean traditions. He finds a way to stay close to his roots and what he calls the “true flavors” he learned in his mother’s kitchen, while never losing that spirit of adventure that created waves back at the culinary institute. Discover why food critic Michael Bauer calls Lam, “a serious cook,” whose dishes, “speak eloquently of his talent.”

You Only Get Married Once...Hopefully!

In all seriousness, your wedding day should be a fantastic celebration that you’ll always remember. So don’t settle for just an ordinary caterer. Why not treat you and your guests to gourmet cuisine from a top chef? Robert Lam has earned high praise for his skills at Brannan’s Grill in Calistoga, and now at Butterfly Restaurant in San Francisco. The San Francisco Chronicle took notice of Robert’s special abilities in 2003, naming him to their list of six Rising Star Chefs - a designation reserved for chefs they predict “will soon be stars on the national stage.”
