Table selection and seating capacity guide

There are a few things to consider when choosing what type of table to use for your next party. The first consideration is whether to use round or rectangular tables. Let's discuss the advantages and disadvantages of each.

- Round tables- are the most popular choice for seating because they allow all of our guests to view each other creating a warm environment for conversation. They also allow for both simple and complex centerpiece designs. The primary negative of using a round table is if space is of the up most concern as these tables take up more space than their rectangular counterparts.
- Rectangular tables- are the most space efficient table you can use at a party. However, except for the guests sitting directly across from you it can be difficult to have a discussion with anyone else at the table. When using rectangular tables you also have to consider not using the head of the table unless you are using a 40" or wider table. Most rectangular banquet tables are 30" wide. This does not allow for a centerpiece much wider than 5" or using the heads of the table unless you lose a seat to the right and the left of the person at the head. These tables are very popular for rustic weddings where a long row is created by joining multiple tables together.
